Having represented clients on both sides of a transaction at origination and in enforcement, Tom has faced matters and situations that many of his peers have not, providing him uncommon perspective and non-replicable experience.

OVERVIEW

After more than 30 years practicing law, Tom has developed a wealth of experience representing banks, insurance companies, private equity and other non-bank lenders of all sizes in loan originations, foreclosures and collection matters in state and federal courts, out-of-court workouts and bankruptcy litigation. He has represented mortgagees in more than 200 real estate foreclosure actions in various state and federal courts. Additionally, Tom has represented clients in real estate loans, general commercial and industrial including asset-based loans, and technology companies, banks and investors in FinTech business arrangements.

Tom's extensive experience drafting and negotiating loan documents provides him with significant insight into the actual enforcement of the documents, whether in or out of court. Conversely, his experience litigating collection and bankruptcy matters lends a unique perspective when negotiating and drafting transactional documentation because he has a firsthand understanding of the rigors of enforcement. His goal is to not only fix the problems facing his clients, but to look to the future and use creative and effective solutions to help prevent future issues. As Tom often says, "if you can put a lien on it, I've probably not only secured a loan with it, but I've also probably foreclosed on it."

Having represented clients on both sides of transactions both at origination and in enforcement, Tom understands the related issues and the processes thoroughly. He has faced matters and situations that many of his peers have not, providing him an uncommon perspective and non-replicable experience. Tom's clients appreciate his pragmatic and efficient approach to his work and solutions.
